Australian Seafood Industry Directory

Australian Seafood Extension and Advisory Service (AUSEAS)

AUSEAS is a joint initiative of the Fisheries Research and Development Corporation (FRDC) and the Queensland Department of Primary Industries. AUSEAS was set up in August 1994 and is located in the International Food Institute of Queensland (IFIQ).

Mission Statement

"To provide the seafood industry with a comprehensive extension service on post-harvest seafood technology, and thus facilitate the adoption of leading edge technology that is timely and appropriate."

Services

- * On-line Specialist Advice
- * Researched Advice
- * Confidential Consultancy Services
- * Assistance in Planning and Appraisal
- * Assistance in Applying Research Results
- * Training Support
- * Liaison with Research Institutes

Resources

AUSEAS is a part of IFIQ, which gives it access to a unique combination of human, technical and informational resources that make it one of the most complete services of its type in the world.

Fees

AUSEAS is supported by both Commonwealth and Queensland governments. Fees for service are charged at commercial rates.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book caught the interest of a large number of people who gave of their time and talents to assist and encourage us in its production.

Funded by the FRDC and supported by the International Food Institute of Queensland (IFIQ) at QDPI. Peter Dundas-Smith, Executive Director of FRDC was very supportive throughout and contributed many suggestions and contacts.

The editors of the industry magazines assisted with advertisements and supporting articles about the production of this publication.

Thanks especially to:

- ★ Norm Grant of Seafood Australia and Martin Bowerman of Queensland Fisherman who assisted also with ideas on layout.
- ★ David Cox and his staff at AQIS assisted with lists of exporters.
- ★ Joanna Kane of QDPI provided access to her database and allowed us to use the seasonality data from her Australian Seafood Catering Manual.
- ★ Jennifer Loose of IFIQ who drew the location maps.
- ★ Wallace Moorhouse of QDPI who provided guidance with the report formatting.
- ★ Management and staff at IFIQ who offered their comments and support.

Cover design by Damian Gibson and Kathy Lange Betty Blue Graphic Design using photographs supplied by Nino Quartararo NSW Fisheries, Jennifer Loose IFIQ, and David Hancock SKYSCANS.

FOREWORD

The Australian fishing industry has grown rapidly in recent years and now makes a major contribution to Australia's rural economy. The value of production in 1993-94 was a record $1,606 million and exports a record $1,241 million.

Australia's fishing industry by international standards is one of the best managed fisheries in the world. The industry employs around 25,000 in the harvesting and processing sectors and is constantly expanding.

Efficient marketing can further enhance the value of the fishing industry. In turn, efficient communication is vital for marketing the catch of fishing operators spread round 20,000 km of coastline.

This directory will make a major contribution to communication through the marketing chain from fishing ports to the final consumer.

The directory has been published by the Australian Seafood Extension and Advisory Service (AUSEAS) of the Queensland Department of Primary Industries, with funding from the Commonwealth Government's Fisheries Research and Development Corporation.

INTRODUCTION

The Australian seafood industry is now a major source of export dollars for the economy. This growth is the result of improved marketing, better utilisation of the wild catch, and development of the aquaculture sector. A major feature in recent years has been the shift away from bulk commodity supplies to smaller shipments of value-added products targeting niche markets for higher returns.

If this trend is to be continued, linkages between all sectors of the industry and its support services must be strengthened. Studies have identified inefficient information flow as a major constraint on the marketing of seafood. The fishing industry is spread around a coastline of 20,000 km so the task of forming and maintaining information delivery systems is a challenging one. This publication is intended to go some way to addressing the problem.

The Directory is centred on the post-harvest sector of the fishing industry. This central focus will help to network the whole distribution chain, linking a sequence of sellers and buyers from the fisher to the final consumer. The effect of this will be to broaden the range of buyers that producers can access and the range of suppliers that a buyer can use.

A comprehensive listing of support services and government agencies is also provided to assist the user to find the relevant service needed.

The Directory has been compiled, published and distributed by the AUSEAS of QDPI with funds supplied by the FRDC. This is one of a number of initiatives aimed at building a unified, competitive industry that will provide maximum sustainable returns from this natural resource.

ABOUT THIS PUBLICATION

This directory is intended for use by people dealing with the post-harvest sector of the Australian fishing industry either in Australia or overseas. It contains a number of features that have been included to increase its ease of use.

Recognising the wide geographical spread and decentralised nature of the industry, the main grouping of entries is by State, as can be seen in the Section Index. Within each State grouping there is a range of categories based on the function of the organisation or person listed. Within each category entries are listed alphabetically.

There are a number of other features including coastal strip maps to show the location of main centres, and seasonality data to guide buyers in their search for suppliers. Processors, wholesalers etc. are listed under the umbrella term "Post Harvest" because many people asked to be listed under several headings.

People frequently complain about difficulties in finding their way through the maze of government departments and agencies that have responsibility for supporting and regulating all the different activities that are involved in the production, distribution, and export of seafood. Government has been presented in a number of ways in this directory to overcome some of these problems.

There is a "government" listing at the start of the book which gives contact numbers for the head office and regional offices of the various agencies. Here the agencies are grouped according to level of government. In addition, there is a sub-directory of the Commonwealth government agencies that is arranged according to function. Finally, the user will also find some government agencies listed by specialist areas. Thus for example the CSIRO is listed three times, as a government agency, as a provider of research and development services, and also in the Commonwealth government sub-directory. This repetition can be justified on the grounds that it increases the chance that the users will find the agency relevant to their needs.

The entries in this directory come from a wide variety of sources. The 1992 edition of the Australian Fishing Industry Directory provided many entries, although in keeping with the post-harvest emphasis of this book some categories were dropped. Some organisations were willing to supply lists of their members who might be interested in being listed. A large number of entries came in response to advertisements placed in the various industry magazines and the supporting articles written by their editors.

We have gone to considerable lengths to ensure that each entry is accurate. Each listing was confirmed by telephone or in writing either by facsimile or mail, a process which in some cases involved up to five phone calls. The entries listed are those confirmed as at 15 May 1995.

COMMONWEALTH GOVERNMENT'S ROLE

The Commonwealth Government has a role in a number of aspects of the Australian fisheries industries. These include control of offshore capture fisheries, the development of policy for fisheries as a natural resource and the conduct or financing of fisheries research and technology development. It supports and assists in the development of export markets for Australian seafoods as part of wider programs of support to Australian business and exporters and the improvement of international trade opportunities.

In the area of fisheries management, the Commonwealth has jurisdiction over fisheries resources within the 200 nautical mile Australian Fishing Zone (AFZ). Six state governments and the Northern Territory have residual powers over water out to three miles from the low water mark, though in some cases this control has been ceded by the States and the Northern Territory to the Commonwealth. Conversely, under agreement with the Commonwealth, States have jurisdiction over some fisheries in the AFZ. Management of Commonwealth fisheries is the responsibility of the Australian Fisheries Management Authority (AFMA), a statutory authority.

The range of Commonwealth activities in fisheries are largely uncoordinated. There are three major departments involved together with a network of agencies, most of which are associated with one of these three departments. The leading department with responsibilities for fishing industry matters is the Department of Primary Industries and Energy (DPIE), while the other departments which directly share elements of the Commonwealth activity are Department of Industry, Science and Technology (DIST) and Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade (DFAT). Other departments such as the Department of Environment Sport and Tourism (DEST) also have some involvement.

The division of responsibilities between departments and agencies often creates problems for industry and the public when planning new national fisheries development initiatives and when seeking information on seafood marketing, marine environment and conservation issues. This information is designed to assist anyone wishing to contact the appropriate Commonwealth department or agency dealing with fisheries matters.

PACKAGING

The subject of packaging is a very wide one with literally thousands of companies offering a wide range of products. Design of packages must meet the needs of the market and also the requirements of the product in terms of shelf life, presentation etc. Selection of material can be very complicated and readers may need to refer to consultants or research institutes for assistance to choose the right system.

The Packaging Council of Australia has a membership which includes, suppliers, manufactures, retailers users, and designers.

The address for this council is:

TRANSPORTATION

Because of the decentralised nature of the fishing industry, transport services have always been a major problem at all levels of distribution from the point of landing through processing and delivery to the final customer. Failure to maintain the "cold chain" is the main factor in loss of quality of seafood. It is essential to ensure that there is good communication between all the different people handling the product along the distribution chain. This can and should take many forms, clear labels, good documentation using facsimiles, posters, and person to person contact.

The development of export markets for fresh chilled and live seafood has meant that air transport both within Australia and overseas has become a vital part of the logistics. Because seafood is so valuable and yet so perishable, all producers must factor transport delays into their quality assurance programs, using insulated packaging, in-pack refrigerant etc. To assist with these problems, the National Seafood Centre has commissioned a number of projects. Further information can be obtained from Deon Mahoney [07] 32688595.

The transport industry is so large and diverse that an effective coverage is beyond the scope of this directory, and users are referred to the yellow pages telephone directory. The secret is to establish an effective network and then to maintain it.
